In bidding good-bye to the credit system of doing business, we do so with a consciousness that the principle underlying the system, could it be safely guarded, is a good one, as it is gratifying to a business man to recocate favors with his customers—to give favors from whence favors are ceived—but at this day, when financial honor is esteemed so lightly, the redit system has, in our opinion, from its abuse, become an unsafe and njust one, forcing the merchant to add an extra profit to cover losses hat are inevitable; losses, as everybody knows, are borne not by the merchant, but by those who pay their bills promptly, and the poor, who, from necessity, must pay cash as they go; hence we propose to give the CASH SYSTEM a fair trial, and to assure all that deal with us that they shall pay only for their own goods, and where no losses are to be sustained by reason of bad debts we can afford to and will work upon a very small
